Sandra Calvert turns to the marketing of products for children and shows that while these photos refer to the preoperative ways of thinking of young people. But these photos are also an example for all of us how to react to things that are really important. When I was a child, I lived with my parents and grandparents in a small town in Wisconsin. There were no toy stores and no supermarkets and we never saw any of them. While my parents were teachers, their lives were pretty hard. Because they lived in a small town, they weren't always able to get the job they wanted.
